I planned my vacation to Israel and Jordan with much excitement, and if I was to be completely honest – a little apprehension. Every time the Middle East features on Australian news it is another headline of civil war, terrorist attacks, car bombs, abductions, military oppression...you get the idea. What I actually found were people just like me and the people from Australia. You have nice people, snobby people, short-tall-skinny-fat people, flirts, academics, religious and secular people...So I wondered, what is it that makes us different? I have always felt that people are essentially the same, but it was just instinctual. So I observed, and I watched the locals during my travels and my instincts proved right. I learned from them that the essence of the human spirit transcends borders and cultural barriers (which we create), and the human spirit is capable of kindness, even to foreigners like me in their land. So you see, we are not so very different after all. Not A Typical Tourist in Israel and Jordan: Travel
