Sun, Sand and Absolute Abandon, a Prelude to Terror and Death! What Price Paradise! Wendell Parkens is privileged, more than a little naïve; he's refined, a man of means. He's an unfaithful husband, an uncaring father; he's a businessman, an accomplished liar and a killer. He lives in a world left to him by a father he despises, a world on the brink of war that is neither of his doing nor of his choosing, a world which he must soon depart if he is to escape a German's misspent bullet or the hangman's knot. Synopsis: Wendell visits the lush isle left to him by his father, deciding he wants nothing to do with Tombola.

Until the day he finds his wife with her lover. Discarding the bodies, he flees. Enduring two years of isolation, he at last searches for a mate, desperate men, and more virgin women to join him in paradise where he uncovers a diary, his father's true nature and the ruby ring which becomes the iconic symbol of The Grand Guardian. His one mistake is Jon Clayton, whose tattered remains are found sprawled on the beach, washed clean by the sea. Jon's son is Jacob, who, nineteen years later, stands at the pole. Years later, Jacob's son, Zach, stands ready to greet his fate, Cassidy watching as his mother hurls the stone that makes Zach's death merciful, Cassidy instantly hurling the second to honour his father. Now The Grand Guardian is 100-years-old. He's sworn that no Clayton will outlive him - yet he sits crumpled at the pole - murdered by his eldest son after writing a frantic journal. He wants his

him, yet he sits cramped at the pole, murdered by his eldest son after writing a frantic journal. He wants his youngest son, Dakota, to possess the ring, to kill his older brother, to become the greatest Grand Guardian of Tombola. Though Dakota is unaware that Cassidy Clayton has stolen the journal and the ring, unaware that Cassidy will escape with his mother to honour his promise to his father that no other Clayton will die at The Feast of Tombola.
