From the collection Insomnia: Paranormal Tales, Science Fiction, and Horror After receiving an eerily disturbing prank phone call, parapsychology college major Ellen Grabowski begins to suspect that something terrible has befallen her younger brother. Unable to reach her parents, she frantically rushes home. Ellen's terror builds when the train she's riding grinds to a halt deep underground. There, a strange woman offers to lend her cell phone, but though Ellen finally reaches home, the call does little to ease her mind. Outside, an unseasonal snow begins to fall, and the flakes don't melt when they hit the ground. The woman smiled and extended her hand.

"I'm Mary," she said. Her teeth were perfectly white, flat, and perfectly aligned. Dentures. "Ellen." The hand was bitterly cold and bony. Ellen shivered, thinking how hard it must be for a body to keep itself warm with such thin skin and so little flesh.
